1. Read the following text carefully:

COMMUNITY GARDENS IN MELBOURNE : FIVE OF THE BEST (extract)

As space in the city becomes more commercialised, gardeners all over Melbourne are claiming urban space to grow food and flowers. Here are some of the most inspiring plots

(...) A sign at the entrance to Veg Out reads: "Gardening is an act of faith in the future." (...)

It has taken more than just faith to ensure the survival of this former bowling club on the site of a $30million-plus piece of land right next to the famous Luna Park and just metres away from the St Kilda beach foreshore. Garden co-ordinator Rob Taylor says the garden initially encountered a lot of scepticism that it would be able to survive in such a prime commercial location, but he says the key has been hard work and always remaining open to the public.

"In the early days it was about locking the gate, but then we realised we needed to open it up. (...) If you lock these places up they wither and die and become elitist and exclusive. A community garden is not a fashion accessory – that's not what community is about."

Veg Out is financially independent (mostly through funds generated from a monthly farmers' market) and hosts more than 150 garden plots on just under two acres (...).

“We have over a thousand members and an actively engaged community here and we are always open to newcomers,” says Taylor. “The best way to get a plot is to come along to a working bee* held on the first Sunday of each month and make yourself known to us. Everyone is welcome.”

James Norman, Australia culture blog, theguardian.com, Thursday March 6th, 2014

* a working bee = a moment when volunteers get together to work.

2. Answer the question using your own words.

What is Veg Out and what makes it successful ? (10 points)

C - Essay writing (eight lines - 15 points)

How can gardens such as Veg Out benefit a community ? Illustrate your ideas with examples.
